The Problem:
Fragmented Campaign Management.

Dungeon Masters expend immense creative energy "forging realms," but that world becomes a burden to manage during live play. Lore is often scattered across physical notebooks, disparate text files, and external world-building apps.

The Opportunity:
Unified Campaign Codex

By integrating an Atlas, NPC, Timeline and Recap system into a unified interface, we allow DMs to access any piece of world data, from NPC motivations to regional history, without ever leaving their primary campaign workflow.

The Holes in the World: A Legend Begins

NOVUS — The silence of the Scriptorium Magna was shattered this week as two strangers, Koll Mosshand and Varric Thorne, awoke with the pulse of the Living Codex in their grasp. While the city of Novus stands as a testament to the Cogent Mandate's order, these "holes in the world's design" have already begun to tear at the seams of local fate.

From the shimmering anxieties of the scholar Elara to the blood-slicked stones of the Menagerie Quarter, the duo found themselves at the heart of a Dissonant rift. Whether by cold iron or silver tongues, the riots were quelled, but the echoes remain.

The party's journey led them beyond the safety of the sea walls to a "Dead Zone" where the Loom's influence withers. There, beneath the shadow of Architect Ruins, they stood before the mourning Geode Guardian. A choice was made between the many and the few—a choice that has surely sent a ripple through the Warp of Morality. The Chronicle has begun, and the threads of Novus will never be the same.

- Item Acquired: @Resonance Key.

The Logic

I chose to address the creative tax of post-session recaps by leveraging existing system triggers, such as dice rolls, combat events, and loot gains. By transforming raw event logs into a thematic newspaper narrative, The Hero's Herald performs the heavy lifting of documentation while leaving the DM in creative control.

Having the system produce the first-draft, allows the DM to spend their energy on personal flair and capturing nuanced roleplay moments that an event log cannot track.

To drive player engagement, and provide some moments of delight, the system intentionally highlights Natural 20s and Critical Failures, surfacing those high-stakes moments that define the session's emotional arc and solidify the party's shared legacy.

Chapter 1: The Weight of Ink

MAP: Novus, City of Covenants

ENCOUNTER: None

City: The Scriptorium's Silence

The campaign begins in @Novus, the City of Covenants. You wake up on a stone bench in the Scriptorium Magna. You have no memory of how you arrived, but clutched in your hand is a tome of white, pulsing leather: @The Living Codex.

A Sylph scholar named @Elara is leaning over you, her translucent skin shimmering with anxiety. "The threads... they don't touch you," she whispers. "You are a hole in the world's design." Before you can answer, an alarm bell rings from the @Menagerie Quarter. A rift of Dissonant energy has torn open, and the city's experimental Architect-tech is malfunctioning.

MAP: Novus Docks

ENCOUNTER: Menagerie Riots

Encounter: The Menagerie Riots (Fibers of Character)

As you rush toward the docks, you find a crowd of @Sundered (humans) cornering a @Chimeric refugee, a creature with the legs of a stag and the wings of an owl. The creature is terrified, accidentally pulsing chaotic magic that is causing nearby objects to float and spin.

The City Watch is moving in with cold iron shackles. "It's a Dissonant spark!" a guard shouts. "Subdue it or kill it before the ripple spreads!"

The Choice (The Fiber):

- Option A (Reason/Order): Help the guards contain the creature quickly to protect the city's infrastructure.
- Option B (Compassion/Freedom): Stand between the guards and the creature, attempting to calm it through empathy rather than force.

DM Note: If you choose B and succeed on a Persuasion check, the Codex glows. You have woven a @Fiber of Compassion. It's a small ripple, but the ink in your book begins to form a faint pattern.

MAP: Architect Ruins

ENCOUNTER: Heart of the Monolith

Encounter: The Heart of the Monolith (The First Strand)

@Councilor Vane of the @Cogent Mandate meets you at the city gates. He's impressed (or wary) of your actions and asks you to travel to a nearby "Dead Zone", a place where the Loom's influence is completely gone. There is an @Architect Ruin there holding a @Resonance Key that could stabilize Novus's failing sea walls.

Inside the ruin, you face a @Geode Guardian. It isn't evil; it's mourning. It believes the @Resonance Key is the only thing keeping the local earth from swallowing a small, innocent village nearby.

The Moral Pivot (The Strand):

- The Cogent Path: Take the Key to @Novus, the City of Covenants. You save the metropolis of thousands and ensure the survival of the Mandate's experiment in democracy. (@Warp of Morality: @Pragmatism)
- The Hearthguard Path: Leave the Key. You save the small village and respect their right to exist, even if it means @Novus, the City of Covenants suffers a catastrophic flood. (@Warp of Morality: @Compassion)

DM Note: The Consequence: This is a major decision. As you make your choice, the Codex vibrates violently. You have woven your first @Strand. This significantly shifts your alignment on the @Warp of Morality. If you chose the village, you might feel a sudden warmth, the beginning of the @Thread of Empathy.

LAUNCH VTT | EDIT EVENT | MARK COMPLETE

Novus, City of Covenants

Built on the ruins of a sprawling Loom-era port, Novus is the grand, messy experiment of a self-governed society. It is the political and cultural heart of the @Cogent Mandate. Where the @Restorationists look to the past and the @Dissonants embrace chaos, the citizens of Novus look to the future, believing they can engineer a better world through reason, law, and sheer force of will.

Appearance and Atmosphere: Novus is a city in constant motion. The clean, perfect lines of the old Architect foundations are buried under a chaotic but vibrant tangle of new construction. Scaffolding clings to half-finished towers, and the air hums with the sound of debate, the clang of hammers, and the cries of merchants from a dozen lands. The city is a true melting pot; @Sundered scholars argue philosophy with @Sylph cartomancers, @Geode engineers direct the reinforcement of the old sea walls, and in a tense but hopeful district, @Chimeric artisans are learning to ply their strange trades. Novus is loud, crowded, and smells of salt air, forge smoke, and fresh ink. It is the definition of "fractious progress."

Governance and Society: Novus is ruled by the @Deliberative, an elected council where representatives from each city district and major trade guild argue, vote on, and ratify new laws. This is the birthplace of the Aethelian constitution, a living document that is constantly being amended. Society is officially secular, placing mortal reason above divine or metaphysical authority. This makes them a hub of science, art, and philosophy, but also a target for more dogmatic factions. While they preach equality, deep tensions exist between the established guilds, the ambitious new thinkers, and the recently arrived Chimeric refugees.

Key Locations:

- The Rostrum: An open-air amphitheater in the city's center where any citizen can take the stage to speak. It is the chaotic, beating heart of Novus's political life, where new ideas are born and popular movements gain traction before being brought to the Deliberative.
- The Scriptorium Magna: Less a library of old knowledge and more a "knowledge factory." Here, scholars, engineers, and mages work tirelessly to rediscover the lost sciences of the Loom-bound era—not to replicate them, but to understand and surpass them. It is here the Cogent Mandate researches new farming techniques, medicine, and legal theory.
- The Menagerie Quarter: The district set aside for the integration of Chimeric refugees. It is a vibrant but volatile slum, a kaleidoscope of cultures and biologies clashing and coexisting. It is both the Mandate's greatest triumph (proving their philosophy of inclusion can work) and their most dangerous powder keg, targeted by nativist saboteurs from within and hostile factions from without.
- The Tide-Gates: The bustling port that serves as the city's economic engine. The powerful Merchant's Consortium that runs the port often finds its ruthless, profit-driven motives in direct conflict with the idealistic laws passed down by the Deliberative, creating a constant struggle between the city's wallet and its soul.

Conflicts and Role for the Unbound: The Unbound will find Novus to be a city of a thousand problems, each one a moral and philosophical test. They might be asked to mediate a labor dispute at the @Tide-Gates that pits the @Precept of Prosperity against the @Precept of Compassion They could be called to defend the @Menagerie Quarter from a plot, forcing a choice between Security and Inclusion. A groundbreaking but dangerous experiment in the @Scriptorium might challenge them to weigh the @Precept of Knowledge against the @Precept of Caution In Novus, there are no easy answers, only difficult choices. It is a city that will constantly force the Unbound to define and defend what they truly believe in.

The Logic - The Chronicle

I designed The Chronicle as a proactive navigation tool that organizes the campaign into chapters, providing a natural narrative path regardless of the direction the party takes. By grouping events into a logical order, the DM can maintain story momentum even when the players deviate from the expected route.

To reduce downtime, each event card unifies an atmospheric image, map data, encounter data and narrative notes in a single view. The inclusion of a "Launch VTT" button acts as a shortcut to action, allowing the DM to transition from theater-of-the-mind to tactical combat without the friction of searching a database for the correct map.

The Logic - Data Panel

To solve for flow interruption, I implemented a persistent data panel. This ensures that when introducing an event, the DM is immediately equipped with all relevant NPC and location data without ever leaving the primary view.

By interacting with contextual tokens, the panel updates to provide deep-dive information while keeping the DM's place in the timeline secure. This design choice eliminates the cognitive cost of context-switching, allowing the DM to provide detailed world-data while staying present in the performance.

EDIT DETAILS

The Logic

I optimized the NPC interface for high-speed retrieval during live play. My primary goals were:

- Easy information retrieval eliminating the need to flip through physical notebooks for character details.
- Simplified inspection with an "at-a-glance" summary of pivotal character traits.
- Sustained immersion ensuring the DM remains present in the social encounter rather than getting lost in the UI.

The Logic

I identified that lore is often lost because it's untethered. The decision here was to link "the where" (maps) to "the what" (lore), ensuring that a DM can retrieve location-specific homebrew without breaking their flow to search a separate document.

Each dot is interactive, clicking through to the next map. Leaving a breadcrumb for easy navigation back and a nested location heirarchy.

The campaign begins in a world adrift. Without the @Loom, communities are turning inward, inventing their own desperate rules for survival. A famine-stricken town might practice ritual sacrifice to appease forgotten gods, while a wealthy city might wall itself off, letting the surrounding lands starve.

You are the @Unbound, an ordinary person who survives a catastrophic event caused by the world's growing instability. During the event, you discover the blank @Living Codex. You realize it is not a holy book to be read, but one to be written through action.

The Logic

I kept this simple and decided it shouldn't be a data-heavy dashboard, we can leave the the stats and recap for the Hero's Herald. The overview can a visual "hook" using banner imagery and high-level descriptions to set the tone for players before they dive into the technicalities of their character sheets.

The Logic

I introduced a hierarchy (Active, Draft, Deactivated). This allows the DM to separate "Live Play" from "World Prep." I made some visual distinctions for what the users role is in that campaign. Helping them quickly understand if they are a player or a DM for that campaign, reducing mental clutter when they are just trying to get a session started.
